BANKS PENINSULA New Zealand

Banks Peninsula was formed following violent volcanic eruptions. The craters nurse the harbours of Akaroa and Lyttelton; smaller bays indent the rest of the coastline. The first European sighting was by Captain Cook in 1770 and Banks Peninsula was named after Sir Joseph Banks, the naturalist.

The Peninsula was inhabited by the Maori Ngāi Tahu tribe. In 1838 Jean Langlois, Captain of the French whaling ship Cachalot, negotiated with a local Maori chief to buy Banks Peninsula. He returned to France and organised emigrants to leave on the Comte de Paris ship but on his return to Akaroa in 1840, the Treaty of Waitangi had been signed and New Zealand became an English colony.

Akaroa today is a stunning seaside village with a French flavour.
